With the thermometer well up on the flag-pole, and beneath the cheerful blaze of a hundred lights, a goodly number of Christian Endeavorers suffered the sweet pleasure of being entertained hast night at the hall of the Y. M. C. A.

Fresh from the tented helds of the White House lot at Washington, where the apirited service of the Lord was interspersed with curious observation of the crowd among which few die and none resign, the Christian Endeavorers came to Hichmond, and quickly was the righthand of followship extended by their brethren here, who are co-laborers with them in the vineyard.

The number of the visitors was greatly below that which had been expected by the local entertainers, and as but a short time was given for notice, the Richmond public did not turn out in as large num-grove, they forbore to say a word against the management or to make invidious comparisons between the hot hall and the tree-crowned campling-grounds on the shares of the Potomac.

The young women were truy divine in their behavior. Great drops of perspiration would gather and roll across their broad, white foreheads, turn a cute trick around the gold-rim of well-balanced spectacles, and tumble across flushed and augowdered cheeks. Lock after lock of hair of various shades fell from once well-curled bangs like the delicate petals of fading flowers, and drooped discon-Christian Endeavor, who seemed to recognize these uncomfortable and disagrees be things as just a few of the daily crosses sent to test their self-composure, and with saintly smile they withheld the test of discust that would have mantled the face of the society girl, and in a spirit of settled submission they listened attentively to the well-chosen words of the serious and sedate-looking young men who, in the name of the several societies, united in welcoming these reapers and binders in the harvest fields of the faith late the spiritual shelter of the local fold.

dalrymen and butchers, who may unload their diseased products on the public. It was argued by many who were anxious for Richmond to have this need supplied that other cities of the same size enjoyed this protection, and that Richmond was becoming the victim of unprincipled milk and meat dealers. So great was the demand for a milk and cattle inspector that members of the Board of Health recommended to the Council that such an officer be appointed. This was not done, and the Academy of Medicine and Surgery took up the matter. After a thorough discussion and investigation, the organization decided that a committee he appointed to make a report to the general Body.

Rev. William Meade Clark.

Rev. William Meade Clark.

Rev. William Meade Clark of Fredericksburg, who has just accepted the rectorship of St. James Frotestant Episcopal church, in this city, is a native of Halifax county, and his father before him was an honored clergyman in the Episcopal Church. He was educated at the University of Virginia, and while there gave evidence of those well-grounded principles which have since marked his life. His intimates soon learned to love him for his integrity, his high sense of honor and merality, and his loyalty to his friends. They knew that he would do to the to and the friends of his youth are the friends of his ripez years.

While at college he used to go into the country and teach a Bible class, and it was while returning from one of these missions that he met with an accident on the train which cost him a limb. It was then that he showed his heroism and his faith in the God whom he served.

By this accident in the midst of the session's work, he was forced, of course, to abandon his studies for a time, but nobody ever heard him complain. On nobody ever heard him complain. On the contrary, he was always bright and cheerful, and when at last he began to hobble around on crutches, he was a welcome visitor among the students wherever he went, and if he chanced to find a friend in the "blues" his cheer-ful presence and friendly counsel were always a sure antidote.

Like student, like preacher, Mr. Clark is genlal, sociable and approachable. He is a fine speaker and a model pastor.

The monthly meeting of the Board of Directors of the S. P. C. A. was held last night in the society's office. Those present were President Jud. Wood, Mr. and Mrs. W. Ben. Palmer, Mr. Chambin, Mr. William Rehling, Ed. C. Mayo
